

G-325R - Biographic Information (Registration)

Overview:

Form G-325R is a biographic information form previously used by the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) to collect background information about applicants. Although it is no longer commonly used for most immigration benefits, it may still be required in specific immigration cases or background checks initiated by other government agencies.

Purpose:

The form collects personal background details such as:

- Full name
- Date and place of birth
- Marital status
- Previous residences and employment history
- Information about parents and spouse

Who May Be Required to File:

- Certain applicants undergoing background checks
- Individuals involved in specific USCIS cases or government security processes
- Not typically filed independently; it's submitted as part of a package when requested

Step-by-Step Instructions:

1. Obtain the Form:

- While the G-325R form is not actively used by USCIS for general immigration applications, copies may be requested by other government bodies.
- The older archived versions are sometimes used in Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) responses or legacy applications.

2. Complete the Form:

- Provide your full legal name and any aliases used.
- List your date and place of birth.
- Provide your citizenship and current immigration status.
- List all addresses you have lived at in the past 5 years (include dates).
- List your employment history for the past 5 years.
- Include information about your parents and spouse, if applicable.

3. Review and Sign:

- Make sure all information is accurate and consistent with other forms or applications.
- Sign and date the form before submission.

Submission:

- The G-325R is typically submitted as part of a government-requested background review.
- Do not submit it unless specifically asked to do so by an agency or officer.
- Keep a copy of the form for your records.

Important Notes:

- Do not confuse G-325R with G-325A (which was discontinued in 2017).
- If requested, USCIS or another agency will provide instructions on where and how to submit the form.
- Never submit sensitive biographic information without a secure request.

Tips:

- Always match information on the G-325R to what is provided in other immigration documents.

- Use black ink if filling by hand.
- Consult an immigration attorney if unsure whether you need to submit this form.
